

Good-Win Racing Cures the MX-5 Muffler Blues

Good-Win Racing has been busy developing products for the latest Mazda MX-5, including a full line of RoadsterSport performance mufflers. We headed to the dyno to sample the shop's single-tip RoadsterSport SuperStreet exhaust, and we drove away happy with the results.

An internal Helmholtz chamber cures the drone, and the unit itself is crafted in long-wearing stainless steel. The muffler also features a removable glass-packed baffle; we did our testing without it.

With the baffle removed, we saw 3-to-5-horsepower gains across most of the rpm range with an additional 8 horsepower near the top end—a straight pipe gave us similar gains but without the sweet exhaust note. The RoadsterSport SuperStreet weighs 13 pounds, 8 less than the stock piece. Look for more details on this exhaust once we delve into our C Street autocross build.

J&M Products: New Slant on Mustang Camber Plates

Late-model Ford Mustangs, like most other MacPherson strut cars, prefer a lot of static negative camber up front. J&M Products just announced a new caster/camber plate for 2011-'14 models that they claim offers more adjustability than anything else on the market. Plus, it carries a lifetime warranty and comes ready to bolt right in.

König Helix Proves 15-Inch Wheels Aren't Dead

Everybody seems to be moving to larger and larger wheels each year, but König just introduced a wheel for those of us with older cars and tighter tire budgets. The brand's Helix wheel only comes in a 15-inch diameter, with widths of 7, 8 or 9 inches. It's light, too: The 7-inch-wide wheel weighs less than 11 pounds. Street prices start at just over $100 per wheel.
